

Colorado remain unidentified after intensive scientific investigation.

The 'official' investigators are always content to sweep the whole matter aside on the basis of being able to explain "90%" of them but ignore the problem itself which is the high percentage which they cannot explain. It is only these which are in fact Unidentified Flying Objects.

Lest someone suggest that the unidentified remainder of reports could be satisfactorily explained if further data on the sightings was available, I hasten to point out that an analysis of a large number of reports by an independent scientist reveals that the "unidentifieds" are supported by the greatest amount of verified data, while the "identifieds" are supported by the least.

Interesting?

Yours sincerely,

Arthur Bray
