Editor, Citizen: As one who does not hesitate to complain when the press publishes incorrect information or makes misleading statements, I hasten also to give credit where credit is due.

I refer to the article about myself in The Citizen Sept. 3, written by Burt Heward. Mr. Heward interviewed me over the telephone in a most courteous manner and displayed genuine interest during his questioning. His article was factual even to his quotations of my own words, for which I am very grateful. As one who has so frequently seen the opposite occur, you will understand why I am so pleased.

Mr. Heward should be commended for his very courteous interview and such accurate reporting.

Dear Sir:

As one who does not hesitate to complain when the press publishes incorrect information or makes misleading statements, I hasten also to give credit where credit is due.

I refer in this case to the article about myself on page 53 of the Citizen on Wednesday September 3rd, written by Burt Heward. Mr. Heward interviewed me over the telephone in a most courteous manner and displayed genuine interest during his questioning. His article was factual even to his quotations of my own words, for which I am very grateful. As one who has so frequently seen the opposite occur, you will understand why I am so pleased in this instance.

I think that Mr. Heward should be commended for his very courteous interview and such accurate reporting.

Yours truly,

Arthur Bray
