

Bush was not even a scientist. He was an engineer. The American Academy of Science did not recognize engineers. The guy who attended the meetings was one of the people who set up the American Academy of Engineering. It however, is only a sister organization to the ACS. When the National Science Foundation was set up, as proposed by Van Bush, the engineering part of the name was dropped. From the book we read "While the bill was before congress, I remonstrated with Van about the dropping of 'and engineering' from the foundations title. ~ Let's not rock the boat," he replied. 'We must get something passed. And anyway, to most people, science includes engineering.' On that observation, Van for once was wrong."

As to Moore and MJ-12 you are missing the point. You state that Moore and three others are a part of a disinformation campaign run by American gov't agencies. Then you express doubts about gov't involvement. Why does the U.S. gov't have to run counter intelligence operations if there is no such thing as UFOs. The U.S. gov't has stated that they have not been involved with UFOs since 1969. Now they're running illegal counterintelligence. You can't have it both ways.

As to crashes being an American phenomena. The last crash I have heard of was from a U.K. researcher of a crash in South Africa. The two live aliens reported captured where shipped to WPAFB. This is logical as the Americans control weapons technology which is what this is all about. The crash supposedly occurred May 8, 89.

Lastly the guy who attended all the meetings at WP was originally from Britian. Now why would they give Top Secrets to a guy who learned to drive a car on the wrong side of the road? I would assume that he like Smith had a need to know. A need to know means that if you have something to contribute they will trade what you know for something that they know. You talk about it like it's some kind of prize.

Just because Smith knew that Bush headed a small group working on flying saucers, does not mean that he knew everything about the group and their work. He may only have known that Bush headed a group. He would like everyone else have been told only what he needed to know to complete his job.

Sincerely,

PS. How did the UFOs know to land at Suffield? That's the half of the story that Solandt conveniently left out.
