

he is nervous and muddly. He tires easily and lives on his nervous energy to the utmost. But if you ever get him alone, relaxed and in the right mood, an entirely different man appears, a deeper more beautiful voice, almost a change of personality in which a Master Consciousness begins to break through, those are the moments I remember and treasure.

THE GREAT SCHISM.

Rather unfortunate was the Adamski-Honey Schism which, boiled down, seems to read as follows - Honey says: "Adamski has been led astray by naughty non-kosher spacemen and men posing as spacemen who are only out for power and money. The world has corrupted them".

Adamski says: "Carol Honey has got too big for his boots and tried to take over my work and has ~~eala~~ claimed contacts etc. which I find very dubious."

A great deal of argy bargy took place and all sorts of rather hard to follow accusations were made by Honey. It probably doesn't really matter in the least. It is just sad that the movement should now confuse people trying to find a glimmer of light. Having read Honey's bulletins I find his metaphysics very shallow. He seems to be a beginner who wishes to be a teacher. His series on the origins of religion were mainly rubbish and based on skin-deep knowledge. His main attack on Adamski is that Admaksi has written things to him which he later denies. Possibly he has, he's a Slav. That's how Slavs tick. Ask anyone who's had dealings with a Russian or a Pole. Because a Slav acts like a Slav, doesn't necessarily mean that he couldn't possibly be in contact with space people. I find the schism a bore, and am glad that people have taken so little notice of it.
