Bush Election Campaign

ELECTION 2000

George W. Bush - Royal Oak, Michigan 02-22-00

During Michigan's recent primary (02-22-00) my hometown of Royal Oak, Michigan was visited by Presidential candidate George W. Bush (SAC NEWS), he was to meet with everyday people from my city at a local restaurant. It seemed as though the perfect opportunity had crossed my path to directly ask a presidential candidate a question regarding the UFO phenomena. I of course was aware that many organizations, including X-PPAC & UFOCity were "putting on the push" to get some statements from the candidates, so with video camera in hand I drove over to Jimi's Coney Island for an early morning visit with Mr. Bush. The crowd of supporters numbered around 100 and as I later found out Mr. Bush's "press people" would be selecting who was "coming in" and who was "going out." I thought for sure this was a "clearing" out of undesirables and believe me, it was! When I approached the door I stated my name, that I was a resident of Royal Oak, I was allowed in. As I sat and waited for Mr. Bush to arrive I gathered my thoughts and prepared myself for what I knew would probably only be 5 to 10 seconds of contact, as we were told that he would just be shaking hands and signing autographs. Well he arrived, people cheered he signed some quick autographs, (very quick, I even got a book signed but that's another story) and the "spin" was on.

The restaurant is small and the people were crowded everywhere around him, not to mention the numerous Texas Rangers who were monitoring the crowd. I decided the best chance I had to ask Mr. Bush my question would be as he exited the restaurant and moved toward his tour van. I slipped outside and waited. I chatted for awhile with a camera crew from CNN and then the moment arrived. Again the crowd cheered and as he made his way through the crowd I squeezed myself through the masses of camera crews and into position, this was the moment. I pressed my hand into Mr. Bush's, looked him in the eye and said...

THE LEGEND OF SKULL AND BONES

Sometime in the early 1830s, a Yale student named William H. Russell—the future valedictorian of 1833—traveled to Germany to study for a year. Russell came from an inordinately wealthy family that ran America's most despicable business organizations of the nineteenth century: Russell and Company, an opium empire. Russell would later become a member of the Connecticut state legislature, a general in the Connecticut National Guard, and the founder of the Collegiate and Commercial Institute in New Haven. While in Germany, Russell befriended the leader of an insidious German secret society that hailed the death's head as its logo. Soon he became caught up in this group, itself a sinister outgrowth of the notorious eighteenth-century society Illuminati. When Russell returned to the United States, he found an atmosphere so Anti-Masonic that even the beloved Phi Beta Kappa, the honor society, had been unceremoniously stripped of its secrecy. Incensed, he rounded up a group of the most promising students in his class—including Alphonso Taft, the future secret attorney general, minister to Austria, ambassador to Russia, and father of future president William Howard Taft. Out of vengeance, he constructed the most powerful secret society the United States has ever known.

The men called their organization the Brotherhood of Death, or, more informally, the Order of Skull and Bones. They adopted the numerological symbol 322 because their group was the second chapter of the German society and founded in 1832. They worshiped the goddess Eulogia, celebrated pirates, and plotted an underground conspiracy to dominate the world.

Fast-forward 170 years. Skull and Bones has curled its tentacles into every corner of American society. The club has set up networks that have thrust three members into the most powerful political position in the world. The group's influence is only increasing—the 2004 presidential election might showcase the first time each of the group's members has been elected. The secret society is now, as one historian admonishes, "an international mafia, unregulated and all but unknown." In its quest to create a New World Order that restricts individual freedom and places ultimate power solely in the hands of a small cult of wealthy, prominent families, Skull and Bones succeeded in infiltrating nearly every major research, policy, financial, media, and government institution in the country. Skull and Bones, in fact, has been running the United States for years.

Skull and Bones cultivates its talent by selecting members from the junior class at Yale University, a school known for its strange, Gothic elitism and its rigid devotion to the past. The society screens its candidates, favoring Protestants and, now, white Catholics, with special affection for the children of wealthy East Coast families. Skull and Bones has been dominated by about two dozen of the country's most powerful families—Bush, Bundy, Harriman, Lord, Phelps, Rockefeller, Taft, and Whitney among them—who are required by the society to intermarry so that its power is consolidated. In fact, Skull and Bones forces members to disclose their entire sexual histories so that the club, as a eugenics overlord, can determine whether a new Bonesman is fit to mingle with the bloodlines of the powerful Skull and Bones dynasties. A rebel will not make Skull and Bones, nor will anyone whose background in any way indicates that he will not sacrifice for the greater good of the organization.

As soon as initiates are allowed into the "tomb," a dark, windowless crypt in New Haven with a roof that serves as a landing pad for the society's private helicopter, they are sworn to silence and told they must forever they are members of this organization. During initiation, which involves ritualistic psychological conditioning, juniors wrestle in mud and are physically beaten—this stage of the ceremony represents their “death” to the life they have known it. They then lie naked in coffins, masturbate, and reveal to the society their innermost secrets. After this cleansing, the Bonesmen give the initiates robes to represent their new identities as individuals with a higher purpose. The society anoints the initiate with a new name, symbolizing his rebirth and redemption. Knight X, a member of the Order. It is during this initiation that the new members are introduced to the contents of the tomb, among them Nazi memorabilia—including a set of Hitler’s silverware—dozens of skulls, and an array of decorative trinkets: coffins, skeletons, and innards. They are also introduced to “the Bones whore,” the only full-time resident, who helps to ensure that the Bonesmen leave the tomb more mature than when they

Grant,

Today is the first time I have been able to check my E-mail in a week.

I have never heard the story that DCI Bush turned down Carter's request. I think it highly unlikely. If you have access to newspaper archives, I do remember reading a report after Carter was elected but not sworn in, that he was briefed on the greatest secrets of the USA. There was no mention of what these might be.

In 1988, Vice President Bush was on a campaign stop in Rogers, Arkansas, just a few miles north of here. I asked him if he became president, would he be willing to tell us the truth about UFOs. He said yes, then quickly added, after he realized what he had just said, if we can find out what it is. He then went in for a meeting with the press. When he came out, I spoke with him again and said I was going to hold him to his promise. He said why don't you (meaning me) send me some things. I said he already knew it all. He said he knew some. I am trusting my memory as I write this. I have these exchanges on tape, but I don't have the tape with me. I am now in the Springdale Public Library. I will dig out the tape if you are interested and try to give you an accurate transcription.

Grant,

Here is a transcript that closely reflects what is on the tape. The date: 7 March 1988. The place: Rogers, Arkansas at a George Bush For President Rally. I mistakenly called him Mr. President in the excitement of the moment.

First Exchange

"CAH: Mr. Bush, Mr. President, will you tell the people the truth about UFOs?

GB: Yeah, if I can find it, what it is. We are really interested.

CAH: You'll have it, you'll have it. It's in there.(I meant it would be in his briefing when he became president.) Declassify it and tell us, ok?

GB: OK, alright, yes.

Second Exchange After A Closed Meeting With The Press

CAH: Going to hold you to that promise.

GB: Alright.

CAH: OK, you're going to get it.(I meant the UFO information.)

GB: Why don't you send me something about it?

CAH: Naw, you're a CIA man. You know all that stuff.

GB: I know some. I know a fair amount."

That's it. Hope you find it of interest.

I have written to Stanton Friedman about the report you sent to me. No reply yet. I first met Stan in 1976 or 1977 and hold him in high regard. I have corresponded with him several times this year on other matters so I do expect to get a reply. I'll let you know what he says unless he specifically asks me to keep it confidential.

Keep the above transcript confidential for the time being. As earlier, I don't want the two reports to become confused with each other.

Welcome to the Campaign Watch 2000 Epilogue, and there is plenty for Before moving on to the obvious, I should note that earlier today we received a response in our six-month-long letter writing campaign to the media. It came from the Features Editor of the British tabloid, "The Sun." While thanking us for our letter, he was "not suitable for the paper," but noted they might be in contact with us. The full text can be seen here: <http://www.ufocity.com/campaign2000/thesun.gif>.

We close out CW2K's letter writing campaign with these stats: American writers, columnists and broadcasters contacted from May through the end of October: 10; number of published articles which resulted from our campaign: 4. The full list of particulars is located at <http://www.ufocity.com/campaign2000/contacts.htm>. British writers, columnists and broadcasters contacted in the United Kingdom: 248; total number of articles published: 10. Our UK spreadsheet may be found at <http://www.ufocity.com/campaign2000/ukspreadsheet.htm>.

These may seem like pretty dismal statistics on the surface, but I am proud to have resulted in five articles being published, both here and abroad, thus bringing to the attention of many thousands of readers who would otherwise be unaware of it, as well as media professionals of the seriousness which some of us feel about this issue. To sneeze at.

For the past seventy two hours, Americans, as well as much of the rest of the world, have listened to the latest developments in what may well go down in the history books as a challenging presidential election results since we won our freedom from a tremendous amount of commentary already posted, printed and broadcast. I will not belabor the point. I can only add that no matter what side of the line we are on, it is safe to say that as far as the issue of excessive UFO secrecy is concerned, it is much as usual no matter who our next president is.

However, given the odds of Governor Bush's taking office as our next chief executive, the citizens who are truly concerned about this issue, have emerged with a new foothold. That foothold, no matter how tenuous it may seem, is Governor Bush. He will tell us the truth about UFOs if he was elected president, which now is a foregone conclusion. As such, the particulars of this 'promise' should be fresh in our minds and worth reviewing.

Eisenhower, for example, made it via shepherding of the interstate highway system. And Lyndon Johnson signed the civil rights act. Thank you for writing to President Clinton via electronic mail. Since June 1999, we have received over 2.8 million messages from people across the country and electronic communication has become a tool to bring government and the people closer together.

Because so many of you write, the President cannot personally review and respond to all. We receive samples of his incoming correspondence. The White House Correspondents' Group can read and respond to the mail. All responses are mailed via the U.S. Postal Service. The electronic message you will receive from whitehouse.gov. No other message claiming to be from the President or his staff with an address at whitehouse.gov is authentic. If you receive a message, you have received a "spoof."

We appreciate your interest in the work of the Administration.

Grant,

Hello, John Tenney here I just saw your website and I thought I'd tell you that my encounter with George W. Bush can be found at:

<http://mainorg.tripod.com/elect2.html>

There are some points of clarification that have been misreported ever since the Peter Robbins report of my incident. Just little things like the name of my home town, (Royal Oak, not Royal Oaks) and the fact that I am not a protestant minister. It is true that I have a mail-order ministers certificate, but I've had that since I was 16, (when I got it as a joke). When Bush's people were "screening" people to talk to him I simply made mention of the fact that I had a minister's liscence and they let me have access into the restaurant where he was speaking. Who says mail-or certificates are worthless? Attached to this email is a video capture of me being "escorted" away from the future president.

That's about it, if you have any questions feel free to write!

John

Bush Budget Gets Spacey

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3, 2003

Proof that life exists outside the boundaries of Earth continues to elude scientists, but President Bush's budget suggests that "space aliens" may be out there somewhere.

And it could just be a matter of time before they are discovered.

In a brief passage titled "Where Are the Real Space Aliens?" Mr. Bush's budget document says that several important scientific discoveries in the past decade indicate that "habitable worlds" in outer space may be much more prevalent than once thought.

The passage acknowledges that hard evidence of alien life has yet to emerge.

"Despite all the space aliens that appear in science fiction movies and books, we have yet to find conclusive evidence for life, even microbes, anywhere in the universe besides Earth," it reads, but then adds, "Researchers have found life in very harsh environments on Earth, which expands the possible kinds of places where life might exist."

Other recent finds include evidence of currently or previously existing large bodies of water — a key ingredient of life — on Mars and on Jupiter's moons.

Astronomers also are finding planets outside the solar system, including about 90 stars with at least one planet orbiting them.

"Perhaps the notion that 'there's something out there' is closer to reality than we have imagined," the passage concludes.

The budget justifies the funding for one space project by mentioning the chance that life exists beyond this planet.

The president calls for $279 million next year and $3 billion over five years for Project Prometheus, which includes building the Jupiter Icy Moons Orbiter.

"This mission will conduct extensive, in-depth studies of the moons of Jupiter that may harbor subsurface oceans and thus have important implications in the search for life beyond Earth," the budget reads.

Mr. Bush is not the first president to show an interest in the possibility of extraterrestrial life.

Clinton aide Webster Hubbell claims in his autobiography that after President Clinton appointed him to a Justice Department post, the president asked Hubbell to investigate whether UFOs existed, as well as determining who was responsible for the assassination of President Kennedy.

The budget is the second time in recent months that the Bush administration has addressed questions about life in space.

On Dec. 24, the White House issued a September determination by Mr. Bush in which he followed his predecessors' lead by issuing a determination exempting the Air Force facility near Groom Lake, Nevada, from environmental laws allowing the release of classified information about the area.

Groom Lake is the place that UFO buffs call Area 51.

"I find that it is in the paramount interest of the United States to exempt the United States Air Force's operating location near Groom Lake ... from any applicable requirement for the disclosure to unauthorized persons of classified information concerning that operating location," the president wrote.

Key Dates: Secrecy and the Bush Administration

Inauguration Day (1/20/01) Administration freezes Clinton-era regulations, without allowing for public comment.

10/12/01 Attorney General John Ashcroft, reversing Clinton policy, encourages agencies to deny Freedom of Information Act requests if a "sound legal basis" exists.

10/26/01 President Bush signs U.S.A. Patriot Act, expanding law enforcement powers and government surveillance.

2/22/02 Congress's General Accounting Office sues Vice President Dick Cheney for refusing to disclose records of his energy task force; the GAO eventually loses its case. A separate private case is pending.

3/19/02 White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card directs federal agencies to protect sensitive security information.

11/25/02 Bush signs Homeland Security Act. Its provisions restrict public access to information filed by companies about "critical infrastructure," among other matters.

01/3/03 Administration asks, in papers filed before the Supreme Court, for significant narrowing of the Freedom of Information Act.

3/25/03 Bush issues standards on classified material, favoring secrecy and reversing provisions on openness.

ALIEN ARMY HEADS FOR EARTH

By LANCE THORENS
Correspondent

THIS amazing NASA photo shows President Bush at Mission Control — obviously disturbed at the image on the main screen of the alien convoy, headed right for Earth!

JUST WEEKS after it ventured out of our solar system and began its journey into deep space, America's Voyager space probe has transmitted a stunning warning — and Earth-based radar has confirmed — that Earth is about to be blitzed by a fleet of 300 alien starships — on Christmas Day.

And while nobody can be sure if the extraterrestrial forces are friendly and bringing gifts or are hostile and will attack, it's clear that mankind is powerless to do anything but hope, pray . . . and wait, highly placed Washington sources say.

"We're talking about a sizable force, 300 small- to medium-size craft traveling alongside a dozen or more gigantic motherships that would seem to be capable of carrying thousands of goodwill ambassadors — or just as many armed troops," says a NASA source.

"This is the last thing we expected from Voyager at this stage of the game — remember, that probe was launched in 1977 and we haven't heard a peep about anything unusual until now.

"But looking back, we should have seen something coming. We've been getting strange readings and what appear to be coded radio messages from Voyager for months.

"We now have strong reason to believe the extraterrestrials were sending messages to us through Voyager's transmitters to make sure we didn't shrug them off as being just another batch of the naturally occurring radio anomalies that deep space is riddled with.

"The question that remains is whether they're trying to tell us they are coming in peace, or to conquer and enslave us — or simply to wipe us out.

"Their communications are couched in a seriously complex mathematical code that, to date, we have been unable to crack. We have no idea what they are trying to tell us.

"But we do know what Voyager's scanners are telling us — and that is that whatever these aliens want, they've spent a hell of a lot of time and money to get here.

"It costs billions to launch a space shuttle into orbit around Earth. And these guys are coming here with 300 starships that make our shuttles look like Model T Fords. Whatever their reason for coming, it's damn serious."

Neither NASA nor the White House will discuss the radio transmissions and potential threat from deep space despite the fact that with Christmas just days away, the arrival of the fleet is imminent.

Sources do, however, confirm that President George W. Bush is alarmed and deeply concerned.

In fact, a senior administration official says that unknown to the public, the president's surprising — and dangerous — trip to London to visit British Prime Minister Tony Blair was no mere publicity stunt.

It was a summit on the threat from space.

"Everything is happening so fast it's difficult for the president to catch his breath," says the official. "A lot of people have noticed Mr. Bush looking haggard and a little unkempt lately, and they've been blaming it on the war on terror and the quagmire we're getting into in Iraq.

"In fact, he's not only got Iraq and terror to worry about, he's got space aliens to consider.

"Immediately after radar readings confirmed the Voyager transmissions, the president called a top secret meeting with top Pentagon and NASA officials to address the crisis. Everyone there agreed that the news should be shared with our ally, Great Britain, hence the president's recent visit."

Intelligence sources expect the alien fleet to touch down in either Arizona or New Mexico where there is plenty of landing space.

And Bush will soon tell Americans to prepare. "I want everybody to just be Americans," he told a close aide. "And that means being open, honest and friendly. In other words, just be yourselves."

A White House insider acknowledges that the Pentagon, CIA, NSA and FBI are all operating on high alert under direct orders from Bush, although it seems, in the words of one military source, "an exercise in futility and frustration."

"What are we going to do if they enter the atmosphere with lasers blazing — throw grenades? We can't fire off nuclear weapons — if we do we not only destroy the extraterrestrials, we destroy ourselves."

The situation is so dire, and so confusing, that the CIA is said to have brought its old ESP Research Group out of mothballs — and now has no fewer than 75 psychics sending mental messages into space in the hope that the extraterrestrials will hear them and communicate their intentions telepathically in a language we can understand.

"For all we know they may be coming here to save us from ourselves, to bring peace to the planet and end all suffering and disease," says one CIA source.

"Of course, just the opposite could be true. I just hope that if they are hostile, they vaporize the planet and wipe us out in a flash. The idea of mankind being enslaved sends chills down my spine."

While NASA and other federal agencies work around the clock to figure out precisely what's going on, Voyager — a probe NASA launched in the hope of finding intelligent life — continues to send back nonstop transmissions, providing what few facts are known about the alien fleet.

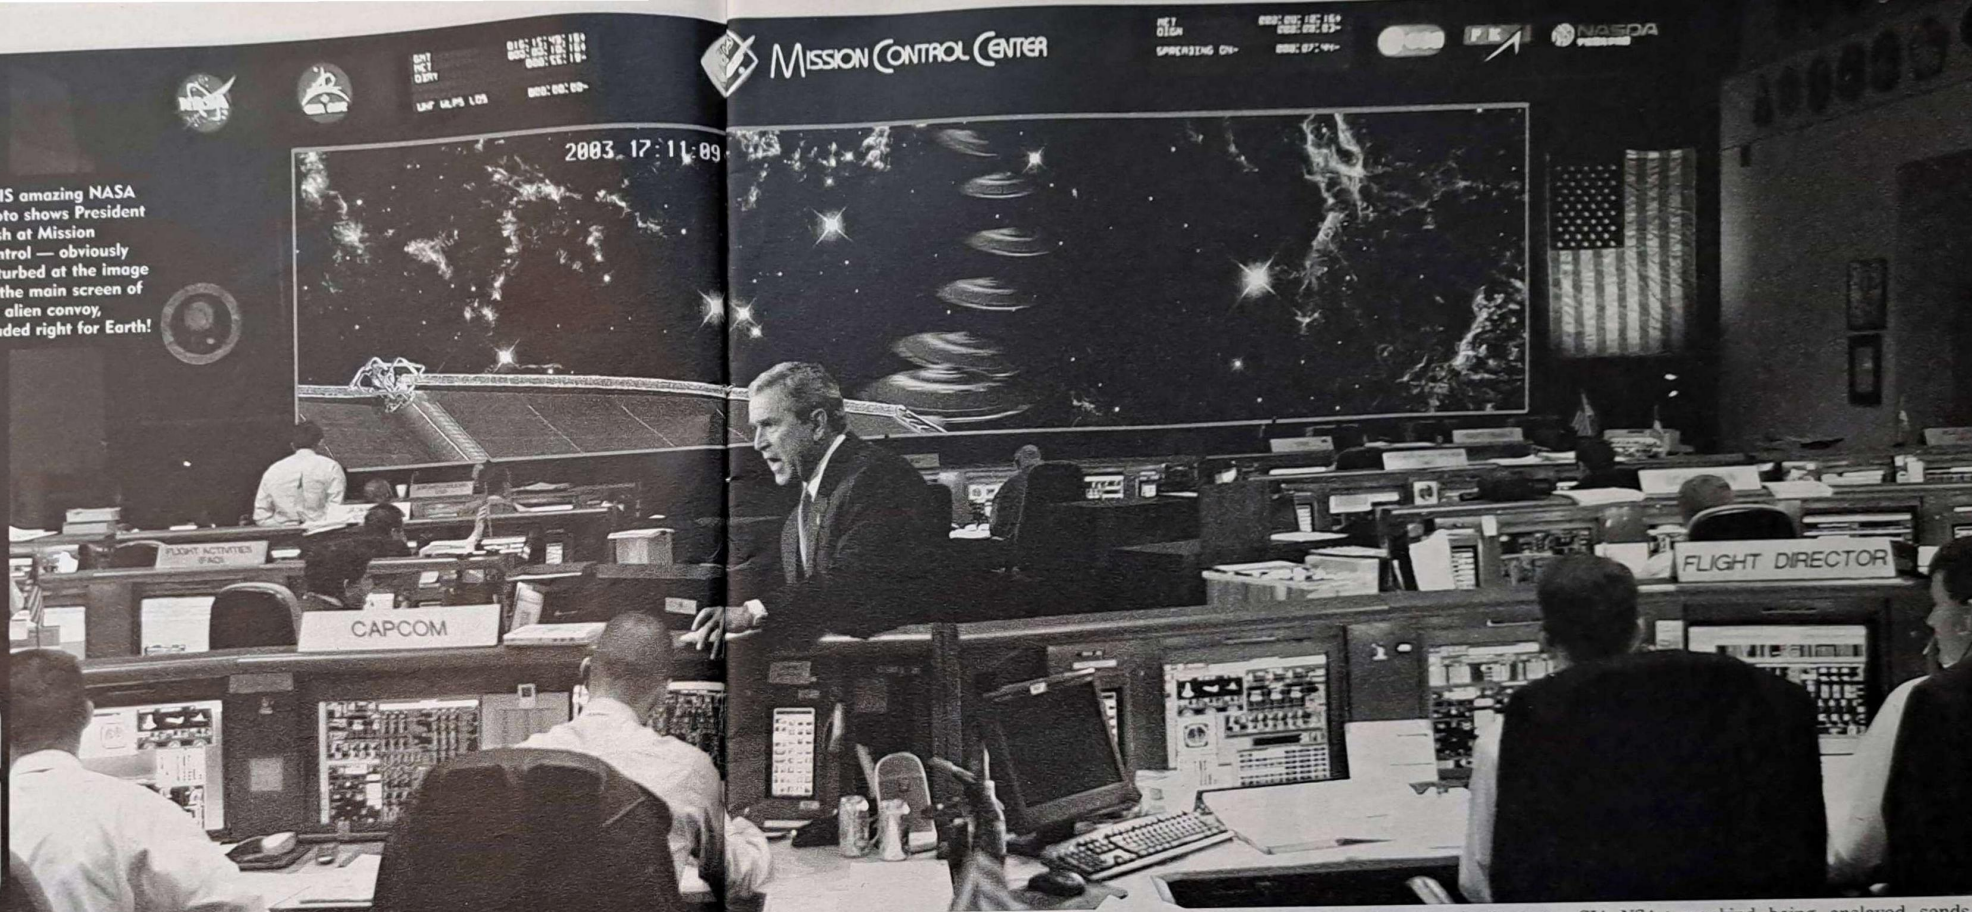

In addition to giving NASA details on the size and number of ships, the sturdy little probe's scanners have also confirmed high levels of radiation that indicate the UFOs are either nuclear powered or, as one analyst put it, "loaded to the gills with advanced weaponry."

Voyager also indicates that the fleet is traveling fast enough to traverse the 10 billion miles between us and it — and arrive in Earth's orbit on Christmas Day.

"There's no telling where the fleet is coming from — it could be anywhere in the galaxy or even beyond," continues the NASA analyst. "One good thing is that we won't have to wait long to find out.

"Let's hope they get out of their starships in Santa Claus suits."

BUSH & PUTIN'S UFO CONSPIRACY EXPOSED:

RUSSIAN PRESIDENT VLADIMIR PUTIN LEAKS NEW AREA 51 SECRET

By ERNESTO CARLETTI/Correspondent

ON HIS September trip to the United States, Russian President Vladimir Putin saw something the federal government doesn't want you to know about — living, breathing extraterrestrials that prove space aliens have arrived on Earth and are being held captive at the Pentagon's super-secret Area 51 military base in the Nevada desert.

One stark, black and white photograph of a spindly, bulb-headed humanoid that was leaked from the Russian embassy in Washington, D.C. — infuriating President George Bush — clearly shows an unconscious creature undergoing some kind of medical procedure.

Either that, say civilian analysts, or the space alien is deathly ill and on what one medical expert candidly describes as "heavy duty life support."

"The photos prove beyond the shadow of any doubt that space aliens are here and the government has, in fact, made contact," says Jack Dyone, author of several books on extraterrestrials.

"Unfortunately, the fact that President Bush allowed a foreign dignitary to see the extraterrestrials while American citizens continue to be kept in the dark suggests that both our elected officials and the military establishment are actively engaged in what is now an international conspiracy to keep this information secret.

"It also tells us that our government is willing to pay a very high price to keep these creatures in good health while 42 million Americans do without health insurance. For all we know that one space alien has been on life support for decades.

"The cost of such an undertaking would be enormous, especially when you consider that this extraterrestrial surely is being cared for by some of the finest doctors in the world."

Neither the White House nor the Pentagon will discuss the photographs that were leaked by a high-level source at the Russian embassy just weeks after Putin powwowed with President Bush on Iraq and other dangerous developments in the Middle East.

But in private conversations, sources in a position to know confirm that the images are authentic.

"While the world thought Putin and Bush were hammering out differences over the Middle East, Bush quietly dropped another issue on the table — extraterrestrial visitation to Earth," says a senior White House official.

"But here's where the story gets really interesting. Not only did Bush and Putin talk about space aliens, they slipped away from Camp David for a quickie tour of Area 51.

"It's pretty obvious that by letting Putin in on a state secret, the president was buttering him up — and hoping against hope that it would make him more amenable to sending Russian troops to Iraq to help the Pentagon out of a jam.

"Why else would he let one of Putin's people take snapshots like a tourist at Disney World, snapshots that came back to bite the president when they were leaked to the press just weeks after Putin returned to Moscow?

"Needless to say, the president is livid about the leak. But he can't point fingers for fear of creating an international incident.

"All he can do is deny the truth in the face of overpowering evidence to the contrary and hope people forget about the cover-up before it causes political damage."

Tight lips are nothing new when it comes to Area 51, which is located about 90 miles north of Reno and is described by eye-winking government officials as nothing more than "a proving ground" for futuristic military gear such as invisible "stealth" tanks, miniature spy planes and laser weapons of every description.

UFO experts have long professed to know otherwise, insisting that it houses the wreckage of crashed starships as well as space alien survivors and dead bodies — including those that are said to have been recovered from a UFO crash site near Roswell, N.M., in 1947.

At the time, the U.S. Air Force admitted in an official statement that a "flying saucer" had crashed in the desert near Roswell. But then, under clear and obvious pressure from President Harry Truman's White House, spokesmen denied it the next day.

It was this stunning retraction that fueled speculation there is more to the Roswell incident than the U.S. government has ever been willing to admit. That speculation includes the charge that UFO wreckage and space alien survivors from Roswell are being held at Area 51 to this day.

"Nobody knows if the extraterrestrials in Putin's photos are Roswell survivors or creatures that came along later," says Dyone. "For all we know one of them could have been visiting the White House, had a heart attack and was taken to Area 51 to keep the media and the public from finding out about them.

"Until the Bush administration comes clean, we'll never know the truth."

As the White House and Pentagon struggle to keep whatever is happening at Area 51 under wraps, administration critics and concerned citizens are threatening to sue for "a full accounting" under guidelines set out under the Freedom of Information Act.

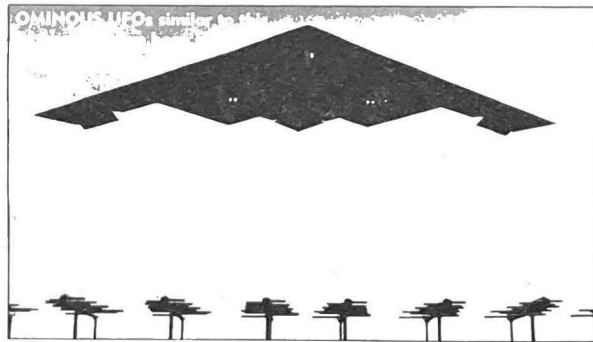

"I'm not even sure God knows what's happening out there," says Margaret Hurlbickson, founder and president of Citizens Unite, a Washington-based watchdog group.

"All that's certain is that American citizens, who pay the light bill at Area 51 with their with hard-earned taxes, have as much a right to know as Vladimir Putin."

SAUCER-LIKE craft is carefully lowered into what appears to be an underground hangar.

VIP TOUR: Bush and Putin examine an E.T. undergoing scientific examination at Area 51. Sources say Bush let Putin see the secret facility to "butter up" the Russian leader, part of Bush's bid for military help in Iraq.

NEWSWEEK PERISCOPE: Entering D.C. Airspace -- As Usual

Sunday May 15, 9:24 am ET

NEW YORK, May 15 /PRNewswire/ -- NEWSWEEK PERISCOPE item:

Homeland security officials believe they're getting a bad rap for keeping President Bush in the dark last week about a major security alert. One source said if Bush were told about every suspect plane flying into D.C. airspace, he wouldn't have much time for anything else. Officials said the alert, triggered by a Cessna that flew into restricted D.C. airspace without permission, was one of dozens of similar incidents that occur every month. Between 9/11 and last week, the Federal Aviation Administration recorded 2,211 intrusions into D.C.-area restricted zones, including incursions into airspace around the White House, Capitol building and Camp David; officials say incidents occur on average twice daily. (When last week's incident began, Homeland Security crisis managers were dealing with an earlier alert caused when an unidentified plane -- whose flight plan was later found to be legit -- was seen heading toward Andrews Air Force base.) Last week's Cessna's pilots flew south into restricted D.C. airspace, turned right in the general direction of the Capitol and White House and failed to respond to urgent radio calls from air-traffic controllers, causing Homeland Security to order patrol aircraft into the sky and the Pentagon to scramble fighter jets. The Cessna turned west before reaching the White House, but did fly over Vice President Cheney's residence. The veep, Laura Bush and a visiting Nancy Reagan were all moved to emergency shelters and the Capitol building was evacuated. After F-16 fighters fired flares, the Cessna finally responded and was escorted to a remote airfield in Maryland. Officials said Bush was not told until after the incident because it was never clear the plane posed a threat to the White House, and military commanders had authority to order the plane shot down if it displayed "hostile intent."

Such aerial events clearly make security officials jumpy: late last month, both Bush and Cheney were moved to emergency bunkers after air-traffic control noticed an "anomalous" radar blip moving in the direction of the White House. Patrol aircraft couldn't find any intruder, and officials now think the radar speck was caused by either a cloud or a flock of birds.

President In Bunker Because Of Aerial Anomaly

The mysterious flying object first blipped across U.S. security radar 20 miles south of Reagan National Airport at 10:40 a.m. yesterday and appeared headed swiftly toward the District.

About 15 minutes later, President Bush was in an underground bunker at the White House and Vice President Cheney was escorted off the White House grounds to a secure location, officials said.

The "target" -- as Customs and Border Protection officials called it -- showed up on the radar intermittently. It was moving through restricted airspace at about the speed of a helicopter, said agency spokesman Gary Bracken. Customs officials reported the object's approach to the Domestic Events Network, a 24-hour secure communications line connecting all major security-related agencies.

Army officials at Davison Army Airfield in Fort Belvoir, Va., spotted a low-flying helicopter in the area but could not determine whether it was the object that had set off the alert.

After vanishing from radar, the target then reappeared several minutes later -- this time just seven miles from National Airport, stirring serious concern among Customs and Border Protection officials, Bracken said. The agency dispatched a Black Hawk helicopter to the scene. A U.S. Park Police helicopter and another from a local law enforcement agency, which were already airborne, also scanned the area.

But all the search teams saw were clouds.

Turns out, that's all it was.

"It does happen," Bracken said. "We have to deal with weather anomalies showing up on the radar screen."

U.S. officials say it is not uncommon for radars scanning the sky for terrorist threats to mistake a weather system or a flock of birds for a unidentified aircraft -- and it sends them scrambling. Yesterday's scare was the first known incident to send the president to the White House underground bunker since the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, 2001. Officials said the swift reaction illustrated the improved communication system among security agencies charged with keeping the sky around Washington secure.

"Out of an abundance of caution, the appropriate security measures were taken," said Brian Roehrkasse, spokesman for the Department of Homeland Security. "Basically there was an apparent aircraft that showed up on the radar, it turned out to be a blip. Aircraft already in the vicinity were able to verify there was in fact no plane."

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration confirmed that a patch of clouds was moving through the area yesterday where the radar picked up the mysterious target.

The temperature was about 63 degrees with light wind and possibly very light showers north of Quantico at the time Customs officials said the blip hit their radar, said Jim Lee, meteorologist in charge at the NOAA Washington-Baltimore weather forecast office. "There were certainly clouds in the airspace," Lee said.

At the White House yesterday, witnesses said some staff members and visitors were removed, and armed, uniformed Secret Service officers took position around the executive mansion.

The Secret Service said it took action because "there was a potential violation of the restricted airspace," said spokesman Jim Mackin.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan said the president was in the bunker for only a "very short period of time." Mackin said the Secret Service raised its alert at 10:54 a.m. and sounded the all clear at 10:58.

"We appreciate the precautionary steps that the Secret Service took," McClellan said. "They do an outstanding job."

Grant,

Please don't take my comments as authoritative here.

I am only repeating what Walt Andrus told me... perhaps the elder Bush did indeed promise to release UFO data. Bill Pitts may have a better source than I. Please note, I was inactive at the time of this statement

Don't know of anywhere this story is recorded in government records.

You might contact Walt Andrus or better still Huffer.

The Gore statement was in the newspapers. I would think it might be in the hearing transcripts. I will see if I can dig out the news article.

The tale you relate about the elder Bush is essentially the same that Walt Andrus told me on Thursday afternoon when we discussed this. Huffer is an active member of the Republican Party apparently with some clout.

However, I don't think that the elder Bush promised to release UFO information. He apparently did make the statement about "you don't know the half of it..." etc. which Huffer got on tape.

Melvin Laird, former SECDEF, several time has made comment to the same effect or that he would be willing to brief various VIPs on the real UFO story. The context is usually that the "real" story is quite down to earth.

BTW it is not Bush, Sr. and Bush, Jr. their names are different. It is Albert Gore, Sr. and Jr. And the elder Gore gave Chief, JCS Omar Bradley an ear full at the Armd Svc Committee hearings in 1952, I believe, on the flying saucers. Gore accused the military of using UFOs as a scare tactic to reel up the defense budget.

Sincerely,

Jan Aldrich
