Dear Colman:

It was a real pleasure to see you and your wife again last weekend. I was certainly surprised when someone from the group called me and invited me to attend.

From a couple of remarks made after your presentation, it seems that I was expected to introduce you to the group. I, however, was not aware of this. Something obviously went wrong with the arrangements. I wondered why no one introduced you, and I thought this was strange. Also, no one thanked you. Perhaps I was also expected to do this, but again, no one had asked me to do this. I would have been very pleased to perform both duties, had I been asked. As a guest myself, it would not have been proper for me to just get up and do it, at their meeting.

Also, I was lead to believe that you were catching an early plane back to New York. When I said goodbye to your wife, she said you were not leaving that night. Had I known that in advance, I could have made some arrangements to see more of you.

Anyway, it was great to see you both again, even if only for such a short time. Thank you for the papers you gave me. Most interesting. Keep up the good work.

Yours sincerely,
