Mystery Lights Aboard Ship NO

On September 6, 1962, officials at Suva, Fiji Islands released information about strange unidentified lights seen aboard the deserted Japanese fishing vessel Toka Maru No. 8, which went aground on a coral reef near Qelelevu Island on September 1. Qelelevu lies to the west of the big island of Vanua Levu. It was north of Vanua Levu that the mystery ship, "Joyita" was found after disappearing while on passage from Samoa to the Tokalau Islands. The Joyita is now beached at Levuka.

On September 2 an official party approached the Toka Maru without going on board. The party comprised District Officer Peter Westwood, Mr. J. Matheson and a police constable. The official report states that all the Japanese had been taken off by another fishing vessel, but that night (Sunday) they saw a light flashing from the direction of the stranded ship. They replied to the light but got no recognizable signal in return.

The next day the officials went out to the ship and found no one. No light was seen that night.

On Tuesday they stripped all electrical gear from the ship and that night saw a light burning brightly and steadily.

Mr. Westwood commented: "It was most uncanny. It was suggested that Fijian villagers might have gone on board but there is no boat at Qelelevu. The sea was rough and it is a long way to swim. We took bearings on the light and it remained constant. Next morning the same bearing gave us the position of the ship. We could find no explanation for the light."

Duncanon, Ireland

IRELAND: Sept 9, 1962 Lelatin of Atwerp reported that a mysterious object the size of a baseball and provided with 4 points had fallen from the sky. The object was seen to land in a field at Duncanon. In falling the object made a crater more than 3 ft. across. At the time of the fall an explosion was heard over a wide area. Army experts from Dublin came and took possession of the object. This report was heard over Radio WCKY, Cincinnati, Ohio on the night of 9-8-62.

9 SEP 62

Another type of colored substance is the "blue rain" that sprinkled a thirty-mile stretch of countryside near London on September 9, 1962. Falling without warning from clear skies, it left a blue stain that wouldn't wash off. Investigation showed that the substance came from jet planes taking part in Britain's annual giant air show at Farnborough. The jets were using the blue dye to color their vapor trails and make a more spectacular display.

Object Strikes Irish Field WJ

A mysterious object, about the size of a baseball with four spokes protruding from it, fell from the sky over county Wexford, Ireland and made a crater four feet in diameter on 8 September 1962. Residents in the area reported hearing an explosion within a half-mile radius, at the time the object fell. It was found lying on top of a burned-up patch of yellow clay. Police cordoned off the field while waiting arrival of military experts from Dublin. No further details.
