Commentary- [redacted]

A bright, oblong shaped light above Bald Eagle Ridge drew my attention. I commented to my husband that it looked like a giant light which would have to be atop a tower. Greg, my son, looked and said that he believed it was a very large star. The light was stationary so we finally came abreast of it and observed that it was too high to be on top of a tower but that it was too low, brilliant, and large to be a star. At this moment a light flashed out of the object, on an angle. It appeared to be something solid rather than a ray because as the flash neared the ground a black space appeared between it and the object.

We kept on traveling, the object seemed stationary but stayed in view. After a while the light started to dim until the thing actually resembled a star in size but now instead of being so brilliant it was dull yellow-orange.

We were commenting that it must be a U.F.O. because of the way it was acting when the thing began to move rapidly through the sky, in our direction. It passed through some open space and moved straight toward a star. (It still looked the same size as a star but the color was still orange-yellow) When it got to the right of our car and almost overhead the small orange-yellow spot disappeared and as it did a giant, round, pink light appeared in its place.

It started out as a light pink and gradually increased in color intensity until it was a bright, deep rose. We had the windows on the passenger side down and had no interference from glass reflection or distortion as we watched. After the huge, rose, circular light was fully lit it illuminated the area around it and we could make out a dim shape. "Look!" we were exclaiming, "that red light is not the whole saucer, it is just part of a larger thing." As we were saying this a soft, white light gradually outlined the shape almost at the edge. It illuminated more of the middle of the object while giving the very perimeter a soft dark outline.

I will explain the way the lights went on this way-when you snap on a neon light you will notice that it does not give off full illumination for several seconds. That is how the pink light acted and that is how the white light acted.

At this time we could see the entire ship and we were not recovered from this thrill when a dark red light seemed to SNAP on directly behind the large pink one. Then immediately another dark red light SNAPPED on directly in front of the pink light. The pink light was now dark red and looked the same size as the other two red lights. Because it was now headed away from us I cannot say positively that the middle light had diminished in size until it was the same size as the other two red lights or if because of its position it just looked as if it had. I now lost sight of the ship and I ask my husband to stop the car but we were nearing a town and he said the road was too narrow to pull to the side without taking a chance of causing a wreck. The kids in the back seat had not lost sight of it because they could swivel around and they started to object when they heard me asking Jim to stop because they said the ship was following us. I looked around and caught one glimpse of it headed in our direction. Then the kids said all the lights turned off and they couldn't see the object anymore. By that time we were at the stop-light which is located in a small town named Milhall. (Town name?)

The observation of the light and small orange-yellow ball lasted for maybe ten minutes but after the object started to move and change I would estimate that it was only a matter of between one to two minutes before it disappeared.

The lights, once they came on, did not blink but remained steady.

The light was under constant observation from the moment it was noticed and there is no chance that we could have gotten one light mixed-up with anything else which could have been in the sky.

Several commercial planes appeared right after the object moved away and one appeared to be on a course which crossed where the object had been when it was stationary.

I have made this as plain as I could and I have enclosed drawings because I realize that my description may not be as clear as I want it to be.

I will gladly answer any questions you may have.
